A Legacy of Preservation

In 1858, Maine native and New Orleans hotelier Ruggles S. Morse began construction on a grand Italianate summer home in Portland, Maine. To furnish his Mansion, Morse contracted New York furniture maker and designer Gustave Herter, founder of one of America's most prestigious interior design firms, Herter Brothers. Today, as the only surviving commission, with more than 90% of its original furnishings intact, the Mansion is a subject of wonder and study for scholars and the general public alike.

And yet, without the support of our members, the Mansion would have been lost. In 1940, this historic treasure was slated for demolition but Dr. William Holmes purchased it and organized a collective of supporters committed to its preservation.

Add your legacy to our preservation effort by becoming a member today, ensuring that this unique museum will continue to educate and inspire future generations.

Why Victoria Mansion?

Victoria Mansion and its interiors are over 150 years old, but that does not mean they are unchanging. Over the last 70 years, we have undertaken a series of major restoration projects. This ongoing conservation program each year brings the Mansion's stately facade and phenomenal interiors closer to their original splendor.

Far from being a static museum, the Mansion is a center of cutting-edge conservation techniques, where some of the world's foremost preservation experts pioneer new processes. It is an ever-evolving, dynamic study in historic preservation and art conservation.

Ongoing research constantly reveals fresh insights about the Mansion, its owners, and its context within national and local history. Through curatorial work and our innovative educational program, we continually use new information to update and inform our interpretation of the Mansion for its nearly 20,000 visitors each year.
